FRUSTRATION REPORT

1. Challenges Faced:

Had to check the selected series from the dataset was whether null or not and did all the selected series had information during the same years and for same countries.

There were no obstacles in understanding the structure and variables of the dataset.

2. Difficulties in Formulating Research Questions:

Using the indicators from different datasets together in a research question to get an insightful information.

It was not a struggle as we understood the indicators and datasets.

3. Strategies Used to Overcome Obstacles:

I have spent more time going through the datasets and indicators, reading the metadata as well to have a good understanding of it.

Working on this kind of project from scratch has been a great opportunity to learn, explore and gain confidence in our work.

4. Reflections and Lessons Learned:

I would change the indicators I selected, based more on the research question prospect than I did the last time and focus on questions and its scope.

This helped me realise that I must focus on the larger picture of it, through out the process and just focus on that one particular step alone.
